

Biography

I've been fortunate to work across some pretty cool performance domains for 25 years, from international football (within the very top professional football clubs) to multiple Olympic sports, as well as spending time in high performing environments such as Google, the Red Arrows, Linklaters, Red Bull and with Les Miserables!

All have been focused on human performance and helping people to become the very best they can within their respective organisations, it's just the context that changes.

This has included supporting many high performing individuals in multiple domains, from grassroots to the Boardroom, and running everything from small scale events to presenting and hosting national conferences.

I'm a strong believer in supporting people to become adaptable, thoughtful and curious individuals, whether they are in the sports field or business world. I enjoy asking the challenging questions, helping people see new things and make creative connections to allow them to thrive in a healthier and happier way.

Colleague View

"Nick is one of the most curious and creative people I know! He is passionate about working with and supporting people to grow and develop and leads with developing connections and understanding those he works with. His commitment to his own personal development is admirable; always wanting to challenge himself and gain an understanding of other areas of interest, possibly none bigger than coaching his sons football team!"

Client View

"Nick delivered our kick-off keynote presentation for our business in a way that kept a very diverse group of staff engaged in a humorous manner whilst providing really interesting thoughts about what high performing individuals and teams might be. He followed this up with a bespoke session for our professional services team and facilitated a great session with actionable outcomes. Would thoroughly recommend Nick!"
